" The Great Wildebeest Migration "

MASAI MARA NATIONAL RESERVE

The Masai Mara is one of the best-known reserves in the whole of Africa and is globally renowned for its exceptional wildlife. Across the vast plains of the Mara, visitors are able to witness lions, cheetahs, leopards, elephants, and an infinite variety of other species in their natural habitats.

The Reserve is famous for its huge herds of Wildebeest and Zebra which migrate through Maasai Mara from the Serengeti around June-October each year. Its tawny, wildlife-stuffed savannahs are familiar to anyone who has watched nature documentaries.

Reliable rains and plentiful vegetation underpin this extraordinary ecosystem and the millions of herbivores it supports. Wildebeest, zebras, impalas, elephants, Masai giraffes and several species of gazelle all call the Mara home.

This vast concentration of game accounts for high predator numbers, including cheetahs, leopards and the highest lion densities in the world.

THE GREAT WILDEBEEST MIGRATION

Wildebeest migration takes place over a wide area through the Masai Mara National Park of Kenya and the Serengeti in Tanzania. These parks have a common ecosystem and there is no boundary between them, except on the map.

With about 2 million wildebeests there are thousands of zebras that form a super-pack. Zebras often find themselves migrating with the wildebeest.

The lions and other carnivores do not migrate with grazing animals, but also, they feed on them when their paths cross.

Animals basically follow the rainy path, to find food as lush fresh grass. The wildebeest will spend the rainy season in the plains of the south-east and the dry season in the forests of the north-west. The animals themselves, however, play a role in shaping their environment to their needs.

Migration can be defined as a cyclic and continuous movement. Wildebeests need to drink every day and their movement is very determined by the presence of water and seems to have a sixth sense in following the storms.
